The Legislative Council, which is composed of five Senators, six Representatives, and the presiding officers of the two houses, serves as a continuing research agency for the legislature through the maintenance of a trained staff. Between sessions, research activities are concentrated on the study of relatively broad problems formally proposed by legislators, and the publication and distribution of factual reports to aid in their solution.

During the sessions, the emphasis is on supplying legislators, on individual request, with personal memoranda, providing them with information needed to handle their own legislative problems. Reports and memoranda both give pertinent data in the form of facts, figures, arguments, and alternatives, without these involving definite recommendations for action. Fixing upon definite policies, however, is facilitated by the facts provided and the form in which they are presented.

FOREWORD

This study was made under the provisions of House Joint Resolution No. 34, passed at the first session of the Forty-first General Assembly. H.J.R. 34 directed the Colorado Legislative Council, or a committee appointed by it, to make a study of the existing statutes requiring publication of fiscal affairs of local governmental units, with these basic purposes:

1. To determine the present need for legal publication of local government financial information
2. To determine the adequacy of the existing statutes on this subject
3. To determine possible legislative changes.

The resolution stated further that this study was needed because the statutes requiring publication of local government fiscal information had not been reviewed for some time to determine their need and adequacy, and because of the lack of uniformity in these laws, as they apply to the several kinds of political subdivisions (e.g. counties, municipalities, school districts, and special districts). The resolution also pointed out the need for an investigation of the types of publications which will best inform the people about the financial affairs of their local governments, and added that there is no relationship between these publication laws and the Local Government Budget Law and Public Audit Law.

This resolution was an outgrowth of House Bill No. 82, which was introduced during the first session of the Forty-first General Assembly, and which failed to pass. This bill, if passed, would have required that all political subdivisions publish their monthly proceedings, presenting an itemized account of each warrant issued, showing the amount paid, the purpose of the payment, and to whom the warrant was paid. Under existing statutes, counties and non-home rule cities with less than 10,000 population are the local governmental units required to make such publication. During the hearings on the bill, the principal support for it came from newspaper editors and publishers, both individually and through the Colorado Press Association of which the daily and weekly newspapers in the state are members. The principal opposition came from school and municipal officials, both as individuals and through their organizations: The Colorado Association of School Boards and The Colorado Municipal League.

Pursuant to the terms of the resolution, which allowed the Council to appoint a committee to make this study, the following Legislative Council committee was named: Chairman: Representative Albert J. Tomsic, Walsenburg; Senator Charles T. Porter, Lewis; and Representative Anne M. Thompson, Rocky Ford.

Harry O. Lawson, Senior Research Analyst on the Legislative Council staff, was assigned the primary responsibility for the staff work on the study.

During the course of the committee's study a public hearing was held at which time the committee listened to the viewpoints and recommendations of the various organizations directly concerned with the publication laws. Their viewpoints and recommendations are presented in detail in the body of the report.

Careful consideration has been given by the committee to:

1. extension to other governmental units or repeal of the monthly proceedings publication requirements;
2. format changes in this type of publication;
3. alternate types and methods of publication;
4. local determination in these matters;
5. the relationship of publication laws to internal fiscal controls.

In covering these points and related matters, the cost of such publications was considered and other state statutes were examined to determine if they contained any new ideas on this subject.

THE PROBLEM DEFINED

INTRODUCTION

It is an underlying concept of democratic government that the citizen has the right to be informed on the operations of the various governmental units which serve him and to which he pays taxes. Such knowledge is basic to informed participation in governmental affairs and such informed participation is vital to the continuation of the democratic system.

As the demand for governmental services on all levels increases, resulting in an increase in the size and complexity of governmental units, the average citizen becomes further removed from direct contact with both elected representatives and appointed officials. This expansion in size and scope of governmental activity has not been confined to the national and state levels. Municipalities, counties, school districts, and the myriad of special districts are all providing more services and are spending more money than ever before. Because of these developments, reporting on governmental activities to the public takes on added significance.

House Joint Resolution No. 34 (1957) directed the Legislative Council to consider one important aspect of the reporting of governmental activities; that of informing the public concerning the fiscal affairs of the governmental units closest to them -- counties, municipalities, school districts, and special districts. How well do Colorado statutes provide for performing this function at present and what improvements might be made?

In a larger sense, however, the problem of financial reporting is related to the various controls placed over the financial transactions of these political subdivisions. In other words, there should not only be a public accounting, but this accounting should be based on procedures designed to exercise proper controls over the spending of funds in the public purse. Then, too, the matter of state policy should be considered. How much control should the state exercise through statutory authority over the accounting and reporting of funds of its political subdivisions and how much discretionary authority should be left to the local officials and citizens?

By law, Colorado's local units of government report financial matters to the public through publication in two ways; by publishing monthly proceedings which itemize each voucher issued, showing to whom it was issued, how much and for what purpose, and by publishing semi-annual and annual financial statements. These provisions are not uniform, however, in their application to all political subdivisions. Only counties and non-home rule municipalities with less than 10,000 population are required to publish monthly proceedings with no such provision applying to school districts or special districts. Counties publish monthly proceedings under the provisions of 36-2-11 (1) CRS 1953, as amended, and non-home rule cities and towns with less than 10,000 population under the provisions of 139-38-4 and 5 CRS 1953. Special districts are also not required to publish semi-annual or annual financial statements, although counties, non-home rule municipalities of less than 10,000 population, and school districts are. If such publications are necessary to provide the public with financial information, is there any justification for not having them apply uniformly to all local governmental units?

There is also no relationship between these publication laws and the Local Government Budget and Audit Laws. For example, there is no requirement that the budget be published or that the annual financial statement reflect the results of the annual audit. These two measures were designed to set up effective controls over local governmental financial transactions, therefore should they be tied into the kinds of publication authorized by law to provide the public with information on local government fiscal affairs?

In addition to consideration of the best publication methods to be provided by statute for informing the public about local governmental fiscal affairs, the cost of such publications must be taken into account. It is the taxpayer who pays the bill for the information he receives through required legal publication. The cost should not exceed the value to be gained and for that reason it may not be feasible to consider certain methods of presentation.

These problems and related matters which have been the concern of the Council committee responsible for this study are taken up in more detail in subsequent sections of this report.

HOUSE BILL NO. 82

House Bill No. 82 introduced during the first session of the Forty-first General Assembly (1957) was considered by its sponsors and supporters as one effective means of providing the public with information on the financial affairs of their local governments. This measure would have made it mandatory for all political subdivisions with one exception to publish the proceedings of their monthly meetings with an itemized account of each voucher issued, showing to whom it was issued, the amount, and the purpose as well as semi-annual and annual statements. The exception applied to any political subdivision with more than 300,000 population and would have granted such subdivision the option of publishing its monthly proceedings or preparing copies and distributing them to all news media and taxpayer groups in the political subdivision which requested them as well as posting a copy on the bulletin board of its principal office. This exemption would have applied to political subdivisions such as: the City and County of Denver and the Denver School District.

House Bill No. 82 was based on the premise that publication of monthly and semi-annual and annual statements is essential to provide the public with necessary local government fiscal information, and its passage would have provided uniformity as far as these publication requirements are concerned, because it would have made them applicable to virtually every political subdivision in the state.

Opposition to this measure was based on these contentions:

1. publication of monthly proceedings are meaningless to the average citizen;
2. such publication is too costly;
3. local units should have the right of self determination in this matter and not be straight-jacketed by a state law.

Those in support of this measure considered the opposition's position simply as an attempt on the part of public officials to withhold information from the public. They asserted that the cost would be small, and they would support local self-determination only if publication of monthly proceedings were first made mandatory, with political subdivisions then having the opportunity to vote against such publication. The opponents of H.B. 82 felt that the publication of monthly proceedings should not be mandatory, but that the citizens in each local government unit should be able to vote to have such publication made if they so desired.

House Bill No. 82 was the only piece of legislation on this subject introduced during the first session of the Forty-first General Assembly. Generally the same arguments, pro and con, were presented at the public hearing held by the Legislative Council committee in initiating its study under the provisions of House Joint Resolution No. 34, even though the study was not limited to merely a consideration of the advantages or disadvantages of H.B. 82 or similar legislation.

OPINIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERESTED GROUPS

On July 31, 1957, the Legislative Council Committee on Legal Publication of Local Government Fiscal Affairs held a meeting, at which the following organizations and agencies were represented:

- The Colorado Press Association
- The County Commissioners' Association
- The Colorado Municipal League
- The Colorado Association of School Boards
- The Colorado Association of School Administrators
- The Bureau of State and Community Service, University of Colorado.

The purpose of this meeting was to get the opinions and recommendations of these organizations with respect to all facets of legal publication of local government fiscal affairs, including publication of monthly proceedings as authorized at present by law and as expanded by House Bill No. 82.

Colorado Press Association

Clyde Moffitt, publisher of the Fort Collins Coloradoan, and Chairman of the Colorado Press Association's Legislative Committee, made the presentation for his organization. Mr. Moffitt said that the Colorado Press Association believes that every political subdivision which has the right to levy taxes also has the corresponding duty to report to the taxpayers on its expenditures. This reporting should be made through the monthly publication of the bills paid and through periodic summary statements, such as the semi-annual and annual financial statements. He added that the public has a right to know about these expenditures, and that this information should be presented in a convenient form. It is an old principle that the democratic form of government is based on the theory that the people can be informed and, thus, make intelligent choices. Arrangements for mandatory legal publication began in this country in colonial times, when it was recognized that the best way to reach the people was through publication.

The problems of government are becoming increasingly complex, Mr. Moffitt said, and all units of government are spending a greater share of the total national income than they ever did in the past. These units are becoming more numerous and are having a greater influence on the people. He cited as an example the change in school districts from very small districts, very close to the people, to large, consolidated districts, some of which are county-wide in area.

The proposal that all units of government publish a monthly compilation of financial transactions is not new, untried, or revolutionary; it is being done at present in the same or similar form in many other states.

The Colorado Press Association agrees that it is possible to work out better and more informative types of publication than a monthly itemized listing of warrants, and the association is prepared to support any legislation which has this effect. Minimum standards, however, must first be set by statute, which was the purpose behind House Bill No. 82. The Press Association is of the opinion that the method of publication as contained in House Bill No. 82 is the most effective way of informing the people at a reasonable price and that they will read such publication intelligently and will be able to interpret such information.

County Commissioners Association

The county commissioners were represented by the following commissioners: Carl B. Bryan, Pueblo; High L. Caldwell, Rio Blanco; Steve Christensen, Morgan; M. P. Cloonan, Jackson; Vernon C. McAllister, Rio Grande; and K. D. McBurney, El Paso.

The county commissioners objected to the present law which requires them to publish their monthly proceedings for these reasons:

1. Such publication has resulted in a newspaper subsidy at the expense of local taxpayers.
2. It is discriminatory to require the counties to make such publication when school districts, special districts, and some municipalities are not so required.
3. Publication of monthly proceedings is too expensive to warrant its continuance.
4. There is considerable doubt that this type of publication really informs the people or that there is much interest in it.

The county commissioners recommended that if the present statutes authorizing publication of monthly proceedings are not repealed then they should be extended to all other political subdivisions. They also requested, if such publication is continued, that the law be revised so that items of less than $50 might be lumped together rather than itemized, and a standardized form of publication be developed.

Other recommendations from the commissioners included:

1. A change in the law which would allow each county to determine whether to publish monthly proceedings or merely to post a copy of the proceedings in the court house;
2. a review of publication laws in light of the local government budget law and audit law which were passed several years ago.

Colorado Municipal League

John Sayre, General Counsel, was the spokesman for the Municipal League. He said that the League felt that some kind of publication was helpful and needed.

Most cities and towns have attempted to inform their citizens as to their expenditures. Those cities and towns under 10,000 population which are not home-rule cities have to make publication of monthly statements, but even the larger cities and the home-rule cities have taken steps to inform the public. Such information is provided through annual reports or monthly statements prepared in some other fashion and distributed with the water bills or available upon request from the city hall.

There is no formal Municipal League policy on H.B. 82, Mr. Sayre said, because at the League's 1957 annual conference it was decided that this was not a matter for action by municipal officials but, rather, is an issue for citizens to take a stand on. The Municipal League does have some ideas on the subject, however, and Mr. Sayre presented these to the committee.

1. No law passed at the state level could be designed to apply equally to all municipalities or even subdivisions, because these subdivisions have different problems, and the municipalities are divided into several classes and categories.
2. If the public has to pay for such publication, then the public should also have the right to decide what it wants. There is a strong need for local option, so that citizens in each community or political subdivision can decide for themselves what kind of publication they want.

In connection with this point, Mr. Sayre mentioned that citizens have the right to initiate ordinances and to recall officials if they do not get what they want from their municipal leaders.

3. More emphasis should be placed on requiring special districts to account for their finances. These districts are growing in size and scope of operations, and very little is known about how they spend their money.

With respect to the need for local option, Mr. Sayre pointed out that the local press certainly has a big influence in the community and can present its case to the citizens and marshall public opinion behind legal publication. The press can assist local citizens in bringing this need to the attention of the local officials and through council action or initiation of an ordinance, there is no reason why such publication cannot become part of municipal law.

Colorado Association of School Boards

John Coffelt, Executive Director of the Colorado Association of School Boards, told the committee that his organization had three recommendations regarding legal publication of local fiscal affairs. First, that the existing policy established by law should be continued, i.e. the accessibility of records to all citizens. Mr. Coffelt added that H.B. 82 would have changed this concept of accessibility of records to one of responsibility on the part of the local governing body for bringing the information to the people instead of having them come after it if they want it. Second, that, if the committee determines that local government authorities have the responsibility of taking the information to the people, the legislation passed should be broad enough for providing flexibility in how it is to be done. Third, if the committee feels that a medium and the method are to be prescribed specifically, then the legislature should conduct an exhaustive study to determine which medium is preferred and which form be best.

Mr. Coffelt said that the school board members, being lay people themselves, represent the people and have an understanding of what the people want in the way of financial information. He told the committee that during the recent series of eleven regional C.A.S.B. meetings, the discussion of legal publication was on the agenda, with a member of the Press Association speaking, along with several school officials, at each one of the meetings. He said that at the conclusion of these meetings, it was the almost unanimous decision of the C.A.S.B. executive committee members to oppose the principles of H.B. 82. He said that the school board officials agree that the people have the right to know, but they feel also that they have the responsibility to get the information if it is made available for them.

Colorado Association of School Administrators

Mr. A. A. Brown, Secretary-Treasurer of the Colorado Association of School Administrators, said that his group opposed the kind of legislation typified by H.B. 82, first, because they think such legislation is unnecessary since the public, including the press, has access to board meetings, and they are all encouraged to come; second, because the schools now publish semi-annual and annual financial statements which give the public an indication of what their schools are doing, and people can contact the school board if they want additional information. Third, because the budget hearings are open to the public, and in many instances, the school boards publish their budgets. Fourth, the C.A.S.A. feels that this is just another added expense which is unnecessary and unjustifiable.

Mr. Brown added that the information published would be misleading in that it does not tell the whole story but just part of the story, and he felt that "take home" salary comparisons are likely to be misunderstood and to lead to poor morale among employees. The school people are not afraid of having the facts published, but they feel that this is not the way to get the job done.

Summary of Public Hearing

It is significant to note that most of the discussion and the recommendations presented to the committee at the July 31 meeting centered around publication of monthly proceedings as provided for in House Bill No. 82, even though the committee under direction of House Joint Resolution No. 34 had announced its intention to consider all aspects of legal publication of local fiscal affairs in its study. While there was agreement that other types of publication might be more informative, none of the participating organizations presented any specific recommendations as to how such publications might be designed or what information they should contain. Mention was made of a need for relating publication laws to the local government budget and audit laws, but no examples were given the committee as to how this might be done. Although local determination of whether to publish monthly proceedings was advocated by some present, no plan was brought forward which outlined how local option might be accomplished.

However, this meeting was valuable not only from the standpoint of giving interested groups an opportunity to be heard, but it also resulted in several problems relating to legal publication of local finances being brought into focus, even though no solutions were readily discernable.

II

COST OF PUBLICATION

One of the major considerations involved in the publication of local government financial information is the cost of such publication. The high cost of publication has been cited as a reason why monthly proceedings should not be published. On the other hand, the Colorado Press Association has stated that the cost of such publication was nominal.

As a result of this conflict in view, the committee directed the staff to make a study of what, at the present time, the cost is to counties and non-home rule municipalities of publishing both their monthly proceedings and semi-annual and annual statements. Questionnaires were sent to the sixty-two counties and to seventy of the municipalities now required to publish this information.^{1/}

In this questionnaire, the counties and municipalities were requested to supply the following information:

1. Annual cost of publishing monthly proceedings in 1956
2. Annual cost of publishing annual and semi-annual statements in 1956
3. The rate paid for each of these publications ^{2/}
4. The number of newspapers publishing this information, and the rate paid to each, if more than one.

In response to the questionnaire, usable information was provided by fifty-four counties and forty-two municipalities. This data for 1956 is shown in Tables I and II and includes estimated population; annual cost of publishing monthly proceedings; the average monthly cost for such publication; and annual per capita cost. These tables also show the annual and per capita cost of semi-annual and annual financial statements.

^{1/} As a charter city and county, Denver is exempt from the statutes providing for such publication.

^{2/} The rate for legal publication is set by statute (109-1-7, CRS, 1953) and is as follows: 13 cents per line one column wide, with second insertion to be at 9 cents per line. However, the statute provides that "any contract providing for payment of such notice at a lesser sum than is provided in this section should be valid."

Total and Per Capita Costs

As can be seen from the summary information presented in Table III, it cost the 52 counties which reported publishing monthly proceedings in 1956 a total of slightly more than $46,000 or an average of $890.¹ Translated to per capita expenditures, the mean or average was almost $.15 and the median² slightly more than $.09. Actually the median is more representative of the average cost per person for these publications in 1956 because the average is unduly weighted by the eight counties which spent between $.30 and $.80 per capita for publishing monthly proceedings.

It is estimated that it cost a total of $59,000 for all counties (Denver excluded) to publish monthly proceedings in 1956. This estimate was made by multiplying the estimated population of the counties which did not report by the median per capita cost of those which did. While only an estimate, it provides an approximation of the total sum involved in county publication of monthly proceedings. The cost to counties of publishing annual and semi-annual statements is also shown in Table III with this information provided by 50 counties. The mean per capita cost of these publications was slightly more than $.04 and the median $.02. In other words, in the median county it cost each citizen almost $.12 to have his county publish both monthly proceedings and semi-annual and annual statements in 1956.

It cost residents of the 42 municipalities which reported, slightly more than $.11 to have monthly proceedings published in 1956 and from $.01 to $.02 for semi-annual and annual statements. This information is shown in Table IV. It cost a person living in an average city or town publishing this information less than $.30 for both county and municipal publication.

Tables V and VI show the distribution of counties and municipalities according to the per capita cost of publishing monthly proceedings in 1956. While it cost eight counties more than $.30 per capita, a third of the counties reporting spent less than $.06 per capita for this purpose in 1956. Only one city spent more than $.30 with the major portion of the municipalities falling in the $.06 to $.12 per capita categories.

Rates Paid for Publication

Fourteen counties or almost 29% of the 49 counties reporting on this item pay less than the legal rate for publication of monthly proceedings. The rates paid by these 14 counties ranged from $.06 per line to $.12 per line. Six of these 14 counties paid this lower rate to more than one newspaper, with the result that the total per line cost to these six counties was equal to or higher than $.13 per line to one newspaper.

Five counties reported paying $.13 a line to more than one newspaper and three of these counties were among the top 10 in per capita expenditures. Only three cities and towns of the 38 reporting on this item indicated that they paid less than the legal rate for publication. None of the 38 have their proceedings published in more than one paper.

In general, the rate paid for these publications have little bearing on the per capita cost to a county or municipality. Two other factors are far more important in their effect on per capita costs: the population of the county or municipality and the number of vouchers issued. The lesser the population of a municipality or county, the greater the per capita cost in most instances, regardless of the rate paid for publication. Naturally, the more vouchers issued, the greater the cost of publication. Central purchasing, or one phone and one utility bill rather than several are examples why one county would issue fewer warrants than another. although they both might spend the same amount of money.

Possible Cost of Publishing School Board Monthly Proceedings

Several newspapers are now publishing monthly proceedings of their school districts either paid for by the school board as is the case in Louisville, Colorado; or gratis as a public service by the newspaper in an attempt to rally public support for this type of publication. which is the situation in Grand Junction, Fort Collins, and Monte Vista. From an examination of three of these publications (Grand Junction, Louisville, and Monte Vista) a rough estimate was made of the approximate annual cost of publication to these school districts. As of 1956-57, the Grand Junction consolidated school district had an enrollment of 9937 pupils, Monte Vista Consolidated school district an enrollment of 1260, and Louisville an enrollment of 400. The approximate annual cost for Grand Junction would be $600, $240 for Monte Vista, and $170 for Louisville. Based on the estimated population of each one of these districts, the approximate annual per capita cost for Grand Junction would be less than $.02; for Monte Vista $.03 and Louisville $.07.

Although these are only three examples of possible cost to schools, they represent three distinctly different size school districts as to the number of pupils and provide a rough indication of what it might cost districts of a similar size to make such publication.

Summary

A careful analysis of the cost data shown above, reveals that cost is not as much of a factor in determining whether monthly proceedings should be published as the opponents of such publication have indicated. It is unlikely that it would cost more than $.50 per capita per year to publish monthly proceedings and semi-annual and annual statements for the county, municipality, school district, and one or two special districts, if a person happened to be residing within such a combination of political subdivisions.

On the other hand, low cost is justification for making these publications only if they do the job they were designed for -- providing the public with complete and intelligible information concerning local government financial affairs.

III

PUBLICATION PRACTICES IN OTHER STATES

The publication laws and practices of twenty-four selected states were examined to see if they contain any provisions or different methods of publication which might be of interest to the committee in making its study.¹ Except in a few instances, these laws offer little which would be of help in Colorado.

In general, the publication laws in other states lack uniformity in that they do not apply equally to all types of political subdivisions. Publication of monthly proceedings and semi-annual and/or annual financial statements are the forms of legal financial reporting most prevalent in the states surveyed. Several states require publication of budgets, and a few provide for limited forms of local determination in the publication of fiscal affairs.

Publication requirements for counties are more numerous and extensive than for other local units of government. Provisions applying to municipalities and school districts follow in that order with very little legislation in the states studied pertaining to special districts.

A reason for this pattern is suggested (and is supported to a large extent by comments on publication laws received from the Legislative Councils in some of the states surveyed). Many of these states passed requirements for publication of local government fiscal affairs at a time when these states were much more rural in character than they are now, and the counties were much more important relatively as local governmental units both as to functions performed and the amount of expenditures.

The lack of legislation providing publication requirements for schools and special districts are to a certain extent also a consequence of the age of the publication laws dealing with local government finances. Schools at the time many of these laws were passed did not spend as much money, proportionately, as they do now, and special districts were neither as numerous nor as comprehensive in scope and functions as they are now. While most of the states surveyed having provisions relating to counties, have extended such legislation to at least some categories of municipalities and a few to schools, special districts have been for the most part ignored.

Except for a few of the states surveyed, there has been a lack of interest in revising publication laws since World War II. In the few states where the statutes have been changed, the Press Association was usually one of the major, if not the main motivating force. In addition to the few states which have revised their publication laws in the past few years, several have increased maximum legal rates.

As mentioned above, monthly proceedings and semi-annual and annual statements are the forms of publication of local governmental finances most in use in the states studied, just as they are in Colorado. Fourteen of the twenty-four states require

1. These states were selected on the basis of similarity to Colorado in local government organization and control. Time did not permit the inclusion of all states, but as definite trends in publication emerged from this sample, it was decided that it was quite unlikely that any other publication patterns would develop if the other 23 states were included.

that at least one type of political subdivision publish both monthly proceedings and semi-annual and/or annual financial statements. Five other states require only that financial statements be published by at least one category of subdivision, and only two states surveyed require the publication of monthly proceedings only.

Of the fourteen states providing for publication of monthly proceedings and semi-annual and/or annual financial statements, only five require both these types of publications for counties, municipalities, and school districts. One state provides for publication of monthly proceedings for counties, municipalities, and schools, but requires financial statements only of counties and municipalities. Two states require counties and municipalities to publish both monthly proceedings and financial statements, while one state which requires publication of monthly proceedings by counties and municipalities, also includes school districts in the publication of semi-annual and/or of annual financial statements.

Four states provide for the publication of monthly proceedings by counties only. Of these four, one requires that semi-annual and/or annual financial statements be published by counties, municipalities, and schools, and three have this requirement for counties and municipalities. One state requires that counties and schools publish monthly proceedings, but only that counties publish semi-annual and/or annual financial statements, while one state requires the publication of both monthly proceedings and semi-annual and/or annual financial statements of schools.

Publication of Budget

While many of the states have a requirement similar to Colorado's, i.e. that notification of budget hearing and the availability of the budget for examination must be published a specified number of days before the hearing, several states require that the budget be published. In most of the states which have this requirement, the publication form used is a summary of the proposed budget, showing the request for the coming year by category, as well as actual plus estimated expenditures for the present year (if not completed), and actual expenditures for the previous year. The same breakdown is presented for revenues.

Eight states have this requirement for counties and also for municipalities, except that one state (Virginia) exempts charter cities from complying with the statute if the charter contains a provision for some sort of budget publication. Only four states require that school districts publish budgets, and just one state (Kansas) provides for such publication by all special districts.

Local Option Provision

Four states provide for some form of local self-determination relative to publication of financial information. However, in all four of these states, the right of self-determination is given to the governing body of the political subdivision, rather than to the voters.

Illinois statutes provide that counties can decide not to publish monthly proceedings if the commissioners determine that the expense of such publication would be excessive. In Utah, first and second-class cities (30,000 population and over) may publish proceedings in pamphlet form for distribution instead of newspaper publication.

In Arizona, cities and towns may publish monthly proceedings or an abstract of the same, at the discretion of the municipal governing body. According to the Arizona Legislative Council, no municipalities are known to make either publication at present. In New Mexico, county, municipal, and school district governing bodies have the option of determining whether or not to publish monthly proceedings. In any event, a summary of the monthly proceedings of each of these subdivisions must be filed with the local newspaper for its use as it sees fit. None of these local units is now making such publication, according to the New Mexico Legislative Finance Committee, and the requirement that a summary be filed with the local newspaper is generally ignored.

Special Publication Rates

Two states provide that the publication of monthly proceedings shall be at less than legal rate. In Nebraska, counties, municipalities, and school districts publish their proceedings at one-half the legal rate, and sanitary, improvement, drainage, and weed eradication districts at one-third of the legal rate.

Iowa statutes provide that municipalities publish statements at three-fourths of the legal rate; counties and schools at one-half. However, Iowa allows an increased legal rate for the publication of tabular material. The rate reduction allowed for publication of monthly proceedings is applied to this increased rate and results in a rate per line higher than the standard legal rate for non-tabular material.

Other Provisions of Interest

Several states tie in the publication of the annual statement with the annual audits, so that a summary of the annual audit is published, rather than a financial statement by the local government's treasurer. In Arizona, the annual statement is published in connection with the budget, with the result that the publication becomes a combined financial statement for the year past and the budget for the coming year. California counties are required to reproduce copies of the budget and announce their availability in the publication of notice of budget hearing.

IV

POSSIBLE PUBLICATION PROGRAMS FOR COLORADO

Publication of Monthly Proceedings

Most of the interest in the publication of financial affairs of political subdivisions has revolved around the question of whether the publication of monthly proceedings should (1) be extended to other or all local government units; (2) apply only to counties and certain municipalities, as is required at present; or (3) not be required of any political subdivision. An example of this type of publication is shown in figure 1, page 18.

The committee is not at all certain that the so-called "to whom, how much, and what for" publications are the best way to inform the average citizen regarding the expenditure of funds by his local governments. On the other hand, the committee's cost study shows that such publication is not very expensive, while serving the purpose of providing a convenient and readily accessible public record of how a political subdivision is spending its money. Neither has the committee ascertained that there is any concerted citizen opposition to the expenditure of tax money for this purpose.

The committee has considered the possibility of changing the format to provide for itemization of vouchers by specific category under each fund. (For example, the enumeration of vouchers pertaining to office supplies, rent, etc, would be placed under the sub-heading "administrative expenses" in the County General Fund, with a total for the month shown in comparison with the amount of money budgeted for this classification.)

While this change might be more informative than the straight itemization of vouchers, this method of publication should be the end product of the record-keeping process, and not an additional clerical chore. This approach merits consideration only when and if all local government financial internal and post audit controls are examined and changed accordingly.

While the committee does not wholeheartedly endorse the publication of monthly proceedings as the best or most effective method of keeping the public informed, it recognizes that, under present circumstances, this method of publication provides one of the easiest, least expensive ways of reaching the public. (Another possibility for monthly publication is discussed below in the section on budgets.)

It would appear further that there should be a uniform state policy as to whether publication should be required of all political subdivisions (with some recommended exceptions). If it is agreed that such publication is of sufficient value to require it of some political subdivisions, then it should be extended to others. If it is agreed that such publication has no value, then no local government should be required to make such publication.

This is a policy question to be decided by the General Assembly. If it is agreed that such publication is of sufficient value, and should be extended to other local units of government, then the following recommendations are made:

1. Continued Exclusion of all Home-Rule Cities

Home-rule cities should continue to be excluded from this publication provision, in order to be consistent with the philosophy of local municipal self-government, as embodied in Article XX, Sections 1 through 6 of the state constitution.

Colorado now has seventeen home-rule cities, with four more in the process of drawing up a charter. These cities range in size from Wray with 2200 population to the City and County of Denver.¹ The citizens of these communities having provided for home rule, should also provide for the kind of financial reporting they desire.

2. Exclusion of Political Subdivisions Which Spend Only a Small Amount of Money Annually

Consideration should be given to exempting municipalities, school districts, and special districts which spend only small sums of money from the requirement of publishing itemized monthly proceedings, providing they are required to make some type of annual and/or semi-annual financial statement.

The maximum amount of expenditure which should be allowed before publication is required, might be somewhere between $5,000 and $10,000.

As an example, the State Department of Education reports that in 1956-57, there were 183 one-teacher school districts in Colorado, with an average expenditure of $4,909, with 114 of these one-teacher districts spending less than $5,000. There were also 52 two-teacher school districts, with an average expenditure less than $10,000. These 235 districts constituted approximately 34% of the 689 school districts in operation during 1956-57. Since the bulk of the expenditures of these districts was for teachers' salaries, the committee questions whether publication of monthly proceedings would be at all necessary.

3. Salaries Should Be Listed Only Once Annually

The present statute should be amended to provide that the salaries of local government officials be published only once, at the beginning of the annual payroll period.

Such publication would meet the need for public information regarding salaries and would be more meaningful to the general public than monthly enumeration showing only the net take-home pay, which depends on tax exemptions and other deductions from the base salary.

4. Lower Legal Rates For Such Publication

While the cost study has shown that the present cost of monthly proceedings' publication is not excessive, and is not working a financial hardship on the local units of government required to publish, such publication might work a hardship on small political subdivisions with limited budgets, if these subdivisions are not exempt from publication because of the small amount of money spent, as recommended in (2) above.

If consideration is given to reducing the legal rate in hardship cases, it should be reduced for all political subdivisions so required to publish, in order to provide uniformity and avoid discrimination. Publications of this sort are much more in the public interest than other legal notices, and, therefore, might be deserving of a special rate. The relationship of legal advertising rates to display and classified advertising rates should be taken into consideration in any evaluation of whether legal rates should be reduced. While a rate reduction might not work a hardship for smaller newspapers, especially weeklies, many larger dailies might be unable to meet costs at a rate lower than $.13 per line.

Local Option

The matter of local option or granting political subdivisions the authority to determine for themselves whether or not they wish to publish monthly proceedings or any other type of financial report is again an overall policy question for determination by the general assembly.

The various problems involved in local option and the pros and cons are set forth for the General Assembly's information.

The only provisions for local self-government are those for municipalities (home-rule) as spelled out in Article XX of the state constitution. Other political subdivisions derive their authority for the most part from state statutes. Included in these statutes are provisions for financial control and for various types of required legal publication. In relation to these other statutes, it does not appear inconsistent for the General Assembly to set the requirements for publication of local government fiscal information. On the other hand, the determination as to whether or not such publication should be made could be left up to the political subdivision, if the General Assembly determines that there is enough variation in local conditions and circumstances to make the imposition of a uniform law unequitable in its application.

The right of self-determination with respect to legal publication of financial information could be granted by statute, either to the governing body or to the citizens of the political subdivision. A survey of publication practices in other states, disclosed that the few examples of local option gave the power of choice to the governing body. It has been reported to the Legislative Council that in most instances where this has been done, the local officials generally have chosen not to publish; in one state, they have even failed to comply with a provision that a summary of the proceedings be filed with the local newspaper if publication is not made. This raises the question as to whether the public can depend upon the governing officials to carry out their wishes, assuming the public's wishes are ascertainable.

It would be advisable, however, if publication be made a local option matter, a procedure should be specified by which the citizens of the local unit can compel action on the part of the local officials.

Another method of granting local option would be to leave the decision up to the citizens themselves instead of the local officials. If this were done, some sort of initiative provisions should be included, spelling out the procedure by which the citizens of a political subdivision could call for a vote of the electorate to determine whether or not publication should be made and in what form.

There is one more item to be considered with respect to local option: Whether publication should be required for a specific period of time (e.g., one year) before an election on the question can be initiated, in order to have a basis for the decision whether or not publication should be continued.

Those who oppose local option provisions feel that it is unlikely that people will take steps to require that publication be made. They assert that this would be the case, especially, if the local governing body is opposed to such publication. If there must be any local option provision at all, they prefer that publication be made mandatory for a specific period of time, with the people then given the opportunity to take steps to reject publication, if they so desire.

The supporters of a local option provision counter that the local newspaper has an extensive effect upon public opinion and should be able to convince the people of the merit of publication, if their argument has any justification at all.

It is not inconsistent with other local government controls to allow local self-determination as to these publications, if the General Assembly decides that this is a decision which is better left at the local level. In general, the committee feels that to require publication of subdivisions' fiscal affairs is as much state policy as it is to set up financial controls for these local units, with the exception of home-rule cities.

Semi-Annual and Annual Financial Statements

The cost survey shows that semi-annual and annual statements are the least expensive and perhaps one of the most informative of the various types of financial publication. An example of annual financial statement publication is shown in figure 2, page 22. It is suggested that all political subdivisions, with the exception of home-rule cities, be required to make such publication, unless a provision for local option is adopted.

The quality of the annual financial statement might be improved if the local government audit law were amended to provide that a summary of the local audit be published either in place of the annual financial statement or in addition to the annual financial statement. Such a change would tie in one aspect of financial reporting with the accounting controls over public funds. If this were done, the audit law would also have to be amended to include special districts among those political subdivisions which are required to have an annual audit.

Sections 110-1-2 and 110-1-3, CRS 1953, now limit the requirement for annual audit to counties, non-home-rule municipalities, and school districts which spend in excess of $10,000 annually. A review of this provision should be made to determine if all local units, regardless of amount of expenditures, should be audited annually, especially if (1) a summary of the audit is published in place of the annual financial statements, and (2) political subdivisions, spending less than this amount, are exempt from publication of monthly proceedings.

If publication of the audit summary is considered desirable, a uniform format for publication would be desirable for each class of political subdivision, if not for all of them in the aggregate. A possible agency to undertake this responsibility would be the office of the State Auditor. Under the provisions of 110-1-6, CRS 1953, each local unit governing body is required to file a copy of its audit within thirty days of receipt of same from the person making the audit. Under the same statute, the State Auditor has the responsibility for inspecting the audit, to ascertain whether the requirements of the audit law have been complied with.

Publication of Budgets

One-third of the states whose publication laws the committee surveyed require that political subdivisions publish their proposed annual budget prior to the budget hearing. There would be considerable merit to adopting a similar proposal in Colorado, depending upon the publication format used.

Publication of the budget might be one way to create greater interest on the part of the public in local governmental affairs and provide an opportunity for examination prior to the budget hearing, so that interested citizens can determine whether or not they have questions which should be answered at the hearing before the final budget is adopted.

The format used in most of the states with a budget publication provision requires that a meaningful summary be shown, by funds and distinct categories, with an itemization of both revenues and expenditures. The format used in Kansas is shown in figure 3, page 24. These budget publications cover a three-year period: The coming year, showing estimated revenues and expenditures; the current year, showing actual and estimated revenues and expenditures if the year has not been completed; and the previous year, showing actual revenues and expenditures.

Most of these states makes a state agency responsible not only for preparing the forms for the full budget, but also for the summary which is to be published. For example, in Kansas, this task is the responsibility of the Department of Post-Audits.

In order to provide for such publication in Colorado, several sections of the Local Government Budget Law would have to be changed. At present, the budget law requires only that a notice of budget hearing be published, stating the time of the hearing and that a copy of the budget has been filed in the local unit's office and is available for public inspection. To provide for publication of the proposed budget, along with notice of the hearing, this section (88-1-9, CRS 1953) would have to be amended.

If the format mentioned above is the one which should be used, not only for publication, but also for the budget itself (and in the committee's judgment it is the best format), then 88-1-4, CRS 1953, would have to be amended, so that the proposed budget form could be written into the statutes.

It may also be desirable that the state agency with which a certified copy of the budget is required to be filed, have the responsibility for designing the format for publication. Under the provisions of 88-1-17, CRS 1953, this agency is the State Tax Commission. Whether or not this is the proper agency for this function should be a subject of any further study dealing with all aspects of local government financial control.

While publication of local government budgets would be an effective means of providing the public with financial information, the question of whether such publication should be made in the place of, or in addition to, the publication of monthly proceedings is again a matter of general policy toward publication by political subdivisions which should be decided by the General Assembly as a whole, and the purpose here is to call attention to such a possibility.

If the local governmental unit budgets are published, it might be possible to design a new type of monthly publication which could replace the publication of monthly proceedings. The format for such publication would be very similar to that for the budget publication and would be in effect, a monthly summary of expenditure according to budget categories and a monthly summary of revenues according to source. Before such publication were put into effect, however, it would be necessary to examine the entire internal financial procedures of local governments, and also to determine if this presentation would be more effective in informing the public than the "to whom, how much and for what" type of publication.

Special Districts

The study has shown that there is a complete lack of financial publication requirements for special districts. At present, these political subdivisions are not required to publish either monthly proceedings or semi-annual and annual financial statements. Whatever type of publication requirements are adopted by the General Assembly they should be extended to include special districts.

According to the preliminary report of the U. S. Bureau of the Census, 1957 Census of Governments, Colorado has 425 special districts--an increase of 128, or 43%, since 1952. These districts perform a multitude of functions. There are police and fire protection districts, recreation districts, conservation districts, and irrigation districts, just to give a few examples. These districts spend a considerable amount of the taxpayers' money without being required to make a public accounting, and the trend is toward the creation of even more kinds of special districts to provide specific services not available through existing political subdivisions.

Conclusion

In making its findings and evaluation alternative methods of publishing local governmental fiscal affairs, the committee found it difficult to make definite recommendations when these publications are considered aside from the internal and post-audit controls over local government finances, of which reporting to the public is only a part. Because of the limitations of the study, as set by the provisions of H.J.R. 34, the committee has confined itself to the publication laws, except in those instances where some of the financial control statutes have a direct bearing upon publication (e.g., the relationship between the audit law and publication of annual financial statements, and between the budget law and possible budget publication).

From its experience with this study, the committee feels that there is a need for a review of all financial controls, as they apply to political subdivisions, of which financial reporting is a part, and that an evaluation of financial reporting would be more meaningful within such a context.

Within the scope of this study, however, the committee has enumerated some of the factors involved in publication of local government financial matters and outlined some possible approaches for Colorado, with an evaluation of their good and bad points, for consideration by the General Assembly.
